Be thankful for foodies this holiday season

With traditions in family feasts, fantastic parades and deliciously festive market outings, the holiday season is rightfully centered around food. Unfortunately, inflation and the avian flu have helped drive up the grocery bill potentially cutting into the budget of glutinously delicious dinners and celebratory sparkling beverages.

To get your brand back on the shopping list, you’ll need to utilize smart advertising approaches to hit consumers in the right mindset. Whether your target market is toting a frozen pie to a family event, or hosting an indulgent dinner party, Oracle Advertising can help your brand stand out on the shelf this holiday season.

Setting the table
While consumers traded down from buying premium products, private labels boosted in performance, with 84% of Europeans saying the quality of private labels is similar to the quality of branded products. To regain your staple status in the kitchen, you’ll need to tout your brands differentiators. Work with media influencers to craft your message in a native environment, then amplify your work by surrounding relevant food, home and mommy blogs.

Splurge worthy dinners
If you’re selling something new or indulgent, look no further than Millennials and Gen Z, who are not only 60% more interested in splurging on ingredients, but are also 5x more likely to believe that new brands are better and more innovative. To target these likely holiday hosts, surround trendy food content with Predicts categories, or test into Oracle Content Affinity Targeting to appear against articles that are popular with younger generations.

Invest in e-grocery tactics
COVID has had a lasting effect on the consumer mindset, including online grocery shopping, with over 60% of US and Asian countries continuing behaviors such as click-to-collect and grocery delivery post lockdown. To make this highly convertible online shopping list, leverage Oracle Contextual Intelligence segments to surround holiday recipes while consumers plan the big meal.
