With subscriptions reaching upwards of $1 billion in ad-based revenue per platform, and CTV ad spend surpassing $26 billion dollars as a whole, it’s no wonder services like Netflix, HBO Max, Hulu, and AppleTV+ have continued to invest heavily in original content and “direct-to-streaming” film releases.

And while streaming is pushing more users to pop popcorn from their microwave and settle in at home, movie theaters aren’t dead yet. We still see traditionally released films break box office records and even some streaming-only platforms are testing into the water with limited theater releases.

Whether you’re backing theaters, streamers, television networks, or a combination of a few, it seems as ad spend will still continue to grow over time, reaching upwards of $105B in 2026 across Linear and CTV. To make sure that ad spend is being put to good use - targeting die-hard theater fans for opening weekend versus homebodies who prefer to binge the latest series at home – choose a targeting partner that has the accuracy, scale, and custom abilities to reach entertainment fans.
