

Anver Versi

Editor African Business and African Banker magazines

Anver Versi, is the award-winning editor of the London-based pan-African business monthlies, African Business and African Banker, was born in Kenya but has been based in London for the last two decades. African Business, established 40 years ago, is the world's widest circulating and most influential economics/business publication specialising on Africa. It is distributed in 104 countries globally with a total readership of around half a million.

Versi began his career with the Nation Group of newspapers in Nairobi, Kenya, before moving to the UK where he worked for several broadsheet newspapers before switching to pan-African publications.

He is the founder editor of African Banker magazine.

Versi has written over a thousand articles for a variety of publications including The Times, The Independent, The Wall Street Journal, The Chicago Tribune and The International Herald Tribune. He regularly writes for the Kenya Airways in-flight magazine, Msafiri, including a column on improving business performance and for Global, The International Briefing published by Nexus for the Commonwealth Secretariat in London.

Publications include Search for Africa's political identity published by Macmillan and the best-selling Football in Africa (1986) published by Collins.